

SAMUEL YELLIN WALL AND ENTRYWAY

This wall and entryway, designed and made by Samuel Yellin Company, is a magnificent example of the medieval and Renaissance-inspired ironwork created for buildings across the country. The wall, as shown, measures 12'-11 1/2" wide x 8'-8" high. Other walls and entryways, and transoms are available.

Yellin was America's master iron craftsman of the twentieth century. Working with notable architects across the country, Yellin encouraged a greater attention to the arts which were applied to buildings. With his staff of over 200 crafts people he created hundreds of designs for gates, lighting fixtures, screens, grilles, railings and doorways for residences, cathedrals, banks, and academic buildings. His commissions include the private residences of J.P. Morgan, Henry Clay Frick, Andrew Mellon, and Cornelius Vanderbilt Whitney, as well as public buildings such as St. Patrick's Cathedral, Washington National Cathedral, Harvard University, Yale University and Princeton University.
